Moonshine Whisky.

A letter from Rosnoke to the Richmond Times says: "Your correspondent has been spending a few days in the mountains of Blue Ridge Virginia, the home of the moonshiner, and has made a thorough investigation of the way this choice selection of liquid poison is produced.

Perhaps among all the lovely and picturesque regions that lie along the Appalachain range of mountains, from the granite hills of New England to the sunny slopes of Dixie, there is none that contains more variedly charming sites and scenes, in hill and dale, rugged glen and high mountain cliff, than the section of country geographically known as Blue Ridge Virginia, com-posed of the counties of Floyd, Carroll and Grayson and parts of the counties of Franklin, Patrick and Mont

While this lovely country in summer is a paradise thereby hangs a tale. For in many a vine-clad ravine lurks a strong evidence of will and aggravated violation of the law, and in almost every deep shaded valley, where apparently the primeval silence is only broken by the murmuring stream as it leaps over its pebbled bed, is almost hidden from human view a rude shed where this concentrated extract of corn and crude cussedness known as "moonshine" or "mountain dew" is made.

The material most commonly used in the manufacture of this burning burlesque on Bacchus is Indian corn, but when a superfine article is desired for home consumption of rye, in pro-portion of one bushel of rye to one of corn, is used. Then, on the other hand, when the whisky is intended solely for commercial purposes, other ingredients are added, commonly the leaves and bark of red-stemmed ivy, tobacco stems and the leaves of a native shrub called "stagger weed." Hickory ashes are also used to give it a head. This is not objected to by the constant consumers of the home-brewed goods, who sometimes add cayenne pepper to it to make it less tiery.

The grain is ground into meal at the country mill, and in order to avoid suspicion the grist is taken to the mill in two-bushel bags on the back of a horse or a steer, the distillers' son or some other small boy generally making a half-dozen trips daily, saying to a curious person who might ask him that the curious person who might ask him that he was having his corn chopped up to feed the stock, when as a matter of FOR SALE BY E. S. LEADBEATER & SONS | whom ever tasted for a straiger fodder. It would be considered a sacriege, however, to doubt the word of any one engaged in the traffic. The price of corn in this region ranges from 60 cents to $1 per bushel, this being due to its manufacture into whisky and not on account of the amount grown, which is considerable. One bushel of corn will make three gallons of whisky, and it is a common transaction for a farmer to barter one bu-hel of corn for a gallon of whisky. The country merchants usually purchase in the fall and winter large quantities of corn in exchange for goods, and it is quite common for the merchant to be a silent partner with a distiller, one member of the firm furnishing the grain while the other does the work. The wagoners, who are a considerable number of the bread-winners of this country, buy butter, eggs and general pro-duce from the merchant and "make out the load" with several gallons of whisky and sometimes brandy, usually in small kegs or jugs, sealed and tagged, the tags bearing fictitious names. The whisky is then sold at various towns convenient to the wagorers, Roaro'ce, Danville, Salem, Radford and Pulaski. Of course the dealers in blockade whisky are frequently apprehended in their violations of the law and severely punished, it generally taking as much money to get a man out of a "revenue scrape" as he had made selling the con-FERTILIZERS

Training article. Yet there is a strange fascination in it. A man when once engaged in the business seldom engages in any other occupation. in any other occupation.

A considerable quantity of apple brandy is also made and sold in this section.
